The Cultists

By Zeek

There is a storm coming, and a big one too. It is important that the projects involving the rainforest in Halimin and Harmini are finished before it, because it will significantly hinder progress for both. Wet ground is much harder to work and make walls or dig trenches in than dry ground, and it might be good for the rainforest growth. All Hallows is also approaching, and the rainforest has the most problems during that time out of all of the places in Falnorian. Today we chose to help Harmini dig their river, because Halimin is dealing with problems concerning an already finished wall, but Harmini has not finished their river yet. Our two main projects in Harmini were number one, hunting and killing rainforest creatures, and number two, dispatching rainforest and volcano elidhu cultists.

Hunting and killing rainforest creatures went as it typically does, we found rainforest creatures, we killed them, and that was that. We talked to a few Harmini builders who were working on the trench which will hopefully later contain the river, and they told us a bit about what was going on. It seemed that a group of rainforest fairies flew around them and were annoying, but were not causing that much trouble overall, which is a good sign. They also told us that a group of rainforest wolfwers came and attacked them, but a big flaming skeleton chased them off. That is good and bad, since it is good that the volcano and rainforest are still fighting, but seeing a large flaming skeleton can never be a good sign. We did not see any big scary monsters, and we were fighting basically the same things we have been fighting for most of the time we have been near the rainforest.

Dispatching the elidhu cultists turned out to be a bit more tricky, as it was not just a straight up win or lose fight. First, we talked to several groups of Harmini builders to gain information and possibly find a few elidhu cultists among them. This task we completed fairly easily, and soon we started to track a large group of cultists that had been sighted. We tracked them and encountered several groups of rainforest creatures along the way, which was to be expected. These rainforest creatures seemed not to be a large threat, and we defeated them without any problems. When we eventually found the group of cultists, we accused them, they fought us, and we won. It was as simple as that, nothing complex like proving that they were elidhu cultists or chasing them around. That is all for today, but I will write more of our future adventures, and I hope that you are interested.
