The Creatures
By Murdoch Brooks

Throughout our time in the builder camp of Orizan, we have been pelted with many different kinds of creatures mutated by the forest. We believe that they are all connected to one main source, some kind of experienced mage or elemental. Here are some of the creatures that we have encountered:

Fairies: We have encountered three different types of fairies, each with their own motives. The green fairies seem to be against the forest, and they each have one green spell with them. They do not attack unless they are harmed, and are generally helpful. The green and black fairies are believed to be mutated by the forest, as they are automatically hostile to us and also hostile to the other kinds of fairies. They each have one green spell and one black spell. They are powerful and have been swarming our spike walls, the first defense until the builders and green wall. Then there are the red fairies, which are also immediately hostile. They each have one red spell and are also swarming the spike wall and green wall.

Then, there are the green zombies: They are zombies mutated by the forest. When we encountered them, they were of many crafts, such as diviners, pyromancers, and other mages. There was also a .-craft that had morale awaken-. They are immune to green spells and are slow, like normal zombies. When we went to the shrines, they seemed more soldier-like; for that, see my other chronicle.

There are also wolfwers. The wolfwers are extremely strong, but they were not grouping up. They were also pretty stupid, so it wasn't too hard to defeat them, but still. They were strong.

There were skull spiders too. The skull spiders looked different once in a while. Some looked like a skull on legs, and others looked like spiders with skulls on their bodies. They have black spells and climbing, and once in a while when they are hit by a weapon it gets acidic blood on it.

Lastly, there were the vine trolls. The vine trolls were big, lanky trolls that looked like mutated wood trolls. They had earthbind touch as well as earthbind aura (crown of vines), and some other green spells.

Thanks for reading another one of my chronicles. I will get back to writing when I get more information.
