Story of the wood elves

The wood elves were once illion elves, living good lives in the rainforest, close friends with the forest spirit, who swore to protect them. Then something, we don't know what, broke them and turned them into wood elves. Then, as far as we know, their life went back to normal. Then, the fall came and death killed them all. The forest spirit is now mad with grief and trying to kill death.

This is a chronicle about the forest spirit. A while ago, a party member was captured by the forest spirit. She left a trail, so we followed it. When we got there, we saw the party member under a charm, and the forest spirit. The forest spirit told us that the party member was a descendant of an ancient wood elf civilization that the forest spirit was guarding. Then she said that “they were once illion elves, but then they were broken.” Then she said that in the fall, death killed all her people. When she unharmed the party member, the party member said that death gave her a memory of wood elves, which contradicts when the forest spirit said that death only takes. We left with the party member, but later that day we saw death and the forest spirit tried to kill death.

The mind of the forest spirit

One of my friends recently did something weird to enter the forest spirit’s mind. In the spirit's mind, he saw the forest spirit weeping. Then the forest spirit told the party member a story. I have already told this story in another chronicle, but in summary, the forest spirit really loved the wood elves and protected them, but then in the fall death killed all the wood elves. Then the party member in the forest spirit's mind made the forest spirit a charm bracelet, tried to calm her down, and was gone.
