The swamp spirit

I am going to tell the story of what happened on this one mission that we did. We were investigating because black fairies are panicked and need help. First, a quick recap: black fairies are a type of good fairy that protects the swamp and are getting killed by the red and green elementals. It has been long suspected that, like green fairies have the forest spirit and red fairies have the volcano spirit, these strange black fairies have their own kind of swamp spirit. Today that theory has been proven correct. When we reached the panicked fairies, we found that there were many fairies of different colors (green and red) attacking them, and other elementals. We also saw this elemental thing that, which seemed to be fully trained in witch, was using witch sorceries to kill the other fairies and protect the black fae. At first we thought the elemental thing was an elemental, but then it told us that it was the swamp spirit. It told us that it was hearing voices in its head that told him to come, but then attacked him, and he was feeling painful visions and a burning sensation. We tried exorcising him, and that stopped the voices for a while, but then they came back, and someone used a sorcery that gave them a vision of the swamp spirit's life. The vision showed that at first, everything was fine, but then he felt this burning and clawing sensation for a while at the edge of the forest. The vision also showed that there used to be other people that helped the swamp spirit with protecting the swamp, which we think are the wood elves because they lived around that area at the time. Then something happened, and the sensation came back. I couldn't find out what happened next because a fight broke out when someone tried to kill a fairy. Then we all left. To any soldiers who are reading this, we need to help the swamp spirit. They need our help and we need theirs.