News

For those who care

Written by Thomas, from Orizan on 4/27 writing on 4/24

Today, the party attempted to interfere with a mound growing near the greenwall, which was smoking. It was not good.

I suspected this mound was a volcano from the start. While in the inn, a party member used minor premonitions on this mission, resulting in a seeing of the future in which everything was covered in ashes and the volcano was erupting. So, we tried it out. As the party got through the first encounter, they started encountering earthquakes from the volcano. As they got closer, these earthquakes became more plentiful and stronger. They finally arrived at the volcano, and there were lava taluses who attacked them, led by their leader, a larger talus. They were… destroyed. Those who died stayed dead on the ground, and others tree formed themselves and others. This proved a good stategy… until the volcano spirit came in. Those who were tree formed had to un-tree form themselves and attempt to run. We lost 3 members to Moriganti. On another note, we rescued 25 out of the 150 people lost in the forest, who will be lost forever if we don't get them back.