Fifth week of eldar now? Anyways, we first decided to hunt down some great beasts, mainly the flame hydra. On the first encounter on the way, we saw a big mud pool with a few people trying to fight it back. It was steaming hot, enough to knock us unconscious, and spewing hot mud everywhere. In other words, we were in hot mud. (get the pun?, hot mud instead of water?). We eventually closed the mud pool off, stopping it from spreading slowly across the field. The second encounter we were there, with a (i dont remember exactly) 4-6 headed hydra? They all healed from fire damage, which proved quite a nuisance considering they all had burning touch. Our only saving grace was that the heads actually took knockout, but we had to drop multiple of them very fast to actually deal any significant damage because they could heal each other. We eventually lost that encounter.

That is all, this time all of this was very short as both encounters took an awful while.

- Bartholomew