News in illionor

As you all know, a war has been happening in illionor as of late. There are two factions in this war: the magocracy, a group of mage schools consisting of the celenrion mage school and other mage schools. This group seeks to restore an ancient form of illion government where mages ruled illion. As far as we know, the magocracy wants to restore this government in order to gain more power over illionor. The other group fighting against the magocracy is the illion alliance, which consists of other illion elves seeking to keep things the way they are. So far, no one seems to be necessarily winning the war. As far as I know, the archmage is still in containment, and recently another high ranking mage was defeated by a group of adventurers that I do not know much about. As for now, much is uncertain, and I shall report back when new information arises.

News in halimin

Halimin seems to more or less be in the same position it was in two decades ago, but there are some notable changes. For one, the greenwall is complete, but the breach in halimin is still not under control. Rainforest and volcano creatures have still been a problem, with vine skeletons and other undead dealing much damage to the party and others. Cultists of the elhidu have also been sighted making sacrifices of blood and body. People are still being charmed and wandering away, and many have been experiencing vivid nightmares that have led to sleepwalking and more disappearances. Undead have also been sighted much more here, and we suspect the elhidu are trying to make a comeback. For now, this is all I know, and all I can give you until new information arrives.