My name is Gorn. I am writing this as a record of what I have done, as I have lived a very long time, and there are many things I know that will be useful for those ahead of me. There is a lot to say, living so long can jumble things, these memories are from a forever ago. I will start from the beginning.

I grew up in Eldspel, which was a faction from before the fall. Their culture was made up of those who practice magic. For most of my early years, I always had a fascination with the powerful mages that worked at the famous schools near where my family lived. At the time I grew up in a well off family. What a different world, compared to what it is today.

I was always indecisive when I was younger, my parents pushed me hard. They wanted me to be strong and capable, to be able to help protect those who can't protect themselves. I took this wish and embodied it. I started with finding my passions, history being one of them, and attunement being the other. History is one of the most useful tools we have, for it provides a means to solve problems, and it provides context that can be used by others. It is sad how many nations around me that struggle with the same issues, over and over and over. If only they pushed forward instead of obsessing over the past. Then, there is attunement, for me this is finding my purpose, and developing a set of skills that are mine. And by mine, they are not only things that I' have mastered, but they are right for me. This is important. Becoming whole will make a person the most confident and complete version of themself. Strange how learning these skills were never what made me whole, but more so the process of having tools, and applying them. Experimenting has gotten me further than any magic has. I will stop here, for I have other matters to attend to.

To whoever is reading this, Remember that there is always hope, kindle it and let it guide you.

-GMH