The Crystalarium

Belmouth (of which I am an inhabitant) located a ley line where they could put a crystalarium. A crystalarium is a place that pulls magical energy out of a ley line and uses it for spell stones. At first, we cleared a path to the location of the crystalarium, then Baldric Keystone (one of our innkeepers and a master builder) led the start of the project to build the crystalarium. Then we fought some magically mutated mountain beasts who were fortifying the area. Once the crystalarium was done, one person in our party started to work at the crystalarium making spell stones and other magical items. Then, we helped map the ley line which was mostly red magic. Red elementals were congregating at the crystalarium. We then moved the crystalline outside the crystalarium while it was being brought back to town. It exploded, giving us all ten mana, and the town red rash. The ten mana killed us all. While you have red rash, you get fatigue from interacting with a pyromancer. If you want to learn more about red rash, here is a chronicle about it.