Last week was the last time we had set out during ninth moon. We had set out to Harmini.I do not quite remember what had happened, but here is my best remembrance. I only remember the first part so that is what I shall say. We had decided to just, go out there and fight everything we can, hoping to encounter fey. I thought that was an extremely risky and not- thoroughly thought-through task so I stayed behind. When my party members returned, I had some VERY frightening news. In the first encounter, they met a plant-human concoction being-(DO NOT UNDERSTAND) that they had met before. Then, they were greeted by a builder who was helping to build a river that would hopefully act similarly to the greenwall down in Halimin. They were suddenly encountered by some rainforest Wolfwere's and other rainforest beasts. They were attacked and were fully dropped multiple times but were continuously able to be healed. Finally, once and for all, they defeated the Beast's plus the Wolfweres. Thank you for reading, I have work to do.

I know that just earlier today, I wrote another chronicle about what happened on the first part. But now, I have finally remembered what happened in the second part! We had just set out and we were looking for some kind of green track thing and wanted to fight the cultists. We had encountered some charmed builders so we knocked them-out and healed them. After we had healed them, they were back to normal but couldn't tell us any information. We had explained to them what had happened, but they literally couldn't remember anything. We had then let them keep working and went on to the next encounter. We then, saw some green zombies and just dropped and burned them. After that, there was a black goo on the floor that was really weird and concerning. I heard some rumors that it has something to do with unconsciousness and waking up, so I gave it a shot and SMOTHERED my Cutlass with it. After that, for the final encounter, I was dealing with something very private and would not like to share, therefore I was not able to meet the cultists and drop them. However, I was informed that we were successful and had dropped and possibly killed them. However, then again, that is just what I remembered. Anyways, I have lots of things to do, so I should get going. Thanks for reading, Goodbye.
